PREFACE

Conventionally, the narrative of an affiliated college had been scripted by the university, the management, the faculty, and the students. This trend described its major twist when the NAAC entered the scene, and took it upon itself to point the way forward. Vardhaman College, Bijnor, created in 1960 through late R.K. Jain’s dedication to philanthropic ideals, introduced higher education in the district. Since then this premier institution has been growing and spreading light of knowledge. When the peer team from the NAAC visited our College in 2007, they were kind enough to find it worthy of a B+. They also obliged us by providing us with a number of suggestions for further development of the College.

The stakeholders have been working hard to see that we respect the signposts set by those suggestions in our onward march. How far our efforts to maintain quality in higher education have been fruitful – it is again for the NAAC to assess and judge. We, therefore, submit a Self Study Report to the NAAC, and eagerly wait for its kind response.
